DAVID NOIRE'S LEGACY

#Liesure

Money for Nothing

by Desirè Brates

If there is one thing rockerboy David Noire is known for besides his heart-pumping tracks, it's his capacity for causing trouble. A trait that has continued to plague his last record label, Indie Media Group (IMG), despite rumors of his death.

"Or he would be big trouble had he not been dropped by IMG just before his 'demise,'" says Sammy Stox, IMG's Finance Reporter. "Of course, their lawyers are claiming the paperwork was never finalized, so Noire remains a valuable IMG asset," Stox continues.

Noire's recording sales are still rising after rumors of his death began circulating last week. The legalities and royalties are looking up for IMG, what about Noire's "well loved" fans?

"He always told us he wore his helmet," said Gretchen Streitmacher, as she and a dozen other girls filed maternity suits prior to his death.

"They never seen a face, so there isn't evidence to exhume the body for DNA testing," concluded one IMG lawyer.

Will David Noire Please Stand Up

By Connie Spears

With David Noire's death, every poser with a black helmet has taken to the stage claiming to be the real deal. Given Noire's famous moniker of wearing a black tinted helmet for all his public appearances and the fact a body has yet to be found, such claims can not be totally ruled out.

Even more interesting is the cult like following of Noire by his unofficial fan club – Black Attack. Some fans have taken vows to never reveal their faces in public like their idol.

"To a lot of people, Noire was a god," D. Eddies translates his girlfriend's words from inside her closed helmet. "Rage in Your Shell" is his best song ever," she said, despite pointing out that Noire did not write or perform the song.

"So what!" she said, "I heard him play it locally. I think at a friend's funeral. I don't know," she wavered, "I was pretty fucked up at the time." She smiles.

So, until the real deal is found, the man, the myth, the legend lives on.

Yakuza Steals Body at "Noire" Wake

by Chu Becca

Two weeks ago, David Noire, local rocker legend, and three hangers on, were seen stuffing the corpse of Mr. Kaine Tekada through a window during the family's funeral services.

Thanks to a grassroots rumor on social media, that 'David Noire' was stated to be Randall Showman.

In retaliation for the humiliation at the Tekada funeral, the Yakuza returned the favor and staged a raid on the recent Showman Family funeral last Thursday, making off with Randall's body. However, according to an IMG spokesman, Randall Showman was not David Noire.

"Noire never removed his helmet in public," said the Indie Media Group representative. Only a handful of people have seen his face. But we can conclusively state that Mr. Showman was not the legendary rocker."

"Social media convinced the Tekada family," said Sara Yoshiro, Little Japan reporter and socialite. "If you hear something enough times it becomes reality," she concludes.

"We are sorry to hear of the events of last Thursday," said the family's spokesperson. "We send our condolences to the Showman family and condemn such actions."

Sara Yoshiro agrees.

"While the Yakuza may view this as a setback, they will not let this go," says the reporter, "Expect three more body bags at the Night City morgue soon."

"Drag Your Ass On"

by Man Tackle Band

"My roundhouse kick connects with your head.
Makes you groggy like getting out of bed.

I take your punch Noire, with little feeling,
because it's my whole body I'm steeling.

One more hit then swing and a miss.
Hard to hit Noire when he's taking a piss

I spy your attack with MyLittleEye®.
Take a swing back; roundhouse makes you die."

Controversy grows faster than than the number of David Noire tribute songs. How did the legend die? If Man Tackle Band is to be believed, Noire was pummeled repeatedly by a single, middle aged man before bloodily expiring in a low rent recreational vehicle. However, other theories exist.

"I've seen the M&M pics. I've heard the stories. I firmly believe Noire took a beating, but died of nut allergies," said one man immediately punched in the face by a Noire fan. "It was one of the rowdiest but yet quietest crowds seen since most of the fans wore Noire's traditional shielded, biker helmet. "Noire was a god," the assaulting fan said muffled by Bobo Brand head gear.

Personally, I like to think Noire died as he lived. . . explosively
